by means of its unforgettable fantasy. But the actual history of "meritocracy" betrayed Young's vision. Scholars ignored the book, but the new word entered the language overnight. In the process, Young's sarcastic "meritocracy" was euphemized into a positive term for rewards to a putative "merit" of individuals.

Children's drawings typically show greater development than paintings because crayons, markers, and pencils are easier to control than paint and a brush. Considerable overlap exists between stages. Two stages may be represented in one work and a child may regress to a previous stage before advancing to the next stage.
